We encourage applicants in any area of Social Sciences including those that can serve our majors in Anthropology, Economics, Environmental Studies, Global Affairs, Law & Liberal Arts, PPE (Philosophy, Politics and Economics), Psychology and Urban Studies. - Political Science
- Global Studies
- International Relations
- International Development
- Medical Anthropology, including Global Health
- Political Economy
- Law and Society, including International Law

These are just a few examples, and applications from scholars with a wide variety of interests within Social Sciences are welcome.

We are especially interested in candidates who combine an active research agenda with interest in a collegiate liberal arts environment and a demonstrated commitment to creative and effective leadership in undergraduate teaching, curriculum development and mentoring.

The J.Y. Pillay Chairs will provide academic leadership through research and teaching, help inform and develop the curriculum in the College, aid in the development of both junior and senior faculty, maintain an active research portfolio in their given disciplines, and play an active role as a teacher.

The successful candidates must demonstrate a distinguished international academic career in the Social Sciences, proven excellence in and commitment to undergraduate teaching, and will also exhibit the vision and spirit to play a major role in the continuing development of a new type of higher education institution.
